TABLE OF CITATIONS

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On March 25, 1991, the petitioner, Marvin Lewis Jerelds, was charged by information with delivery of cocaine (Count I) and possession of cocaine (Count II). A jury found Jerelds guilty on both counts (R233-234). On September 5, 1991, the trial court adjudicated Jerelds guilty and sentenced him to concurrent seven-year sentences as a habitual offender. On appeal, the conviction was affirmed by the district court (Appendix A). Jerelds filed notice on August 31, 1992, to invoke this court's discretionary jurisdiction (Appendix B).

STATEMENT OF THE FACTS

Agents Parsell, Guy, and Hanton drove an unmarked car around to local street corners attempting to puchase cocaine. They saw Jerelds, whom they did not know, who they stated was not the target of any narcotics investigation, and who did not signal the car in any way. The agents drove up to Jerelds and asked whether he knew Lisa and her whereabouts. (Lisa is a local drug user.) There is contradictory testimony about whether the agents first offered Jerelds a ride to his housing project and then mentioned drugs after they arrived, or asked about drugs first and were joined by Jerelds as guide. It is agreed that the agents prevailed upon Jerelds to buy $20 worth of crack cocaine from some dealers standing around. Jerelds got the crack from these dealers, turned it over to the agents, and got $20, which he in turn gave the dealers. The dealers immediately ran off, and the agents made no effort to apprehend them.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

The decision of the Fifth District Court of Appeal in the instant case, Jerelds v. State, 17 F.L.W. (Fla. 5th DCA, Aug. 7, 1992), is in direct conflict with the decisions of the Florida Supreme Court in State v. Hunter, 586 So.2d 319 (Fla. 1991), and Cruz v. State, 465 So.2d 516 (Fla.), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 905, 105 S.Ct. 3527, 87 L.Ed.2d 652 (1985), and with the decisions of the Second District Court of Appeal in Beattie v. State, 595 So.2d 249 (Fla. 2d DCA 1992), and Bowser v. State, 555 So.2d 879 (Fla. 2d DCA 1989). The Jerelds opinion makes correct statements of the law, but misinterprets and misapplies them, generating confusion and disharmony.

ARGUMENT

THE DECISION OF THE FIFTH DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL IN JERELDS V. STATE, 17 F.L.W. 1834 (FLA. 5TH DCA AUG. 7, 1992), CONFLICTS EXPRESSLY AND DIRECTLY WITH DECISIONS OF THIS COURT AND OF THE SECOND DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL.

The decision of the Fifth District Court of Appeal in the instant case is in direct conflict with the decisions of the Florida Supreme Court in State v. Hunter, 586 So.2d 319 (Fla. 1991), and Cruz v. State, 465 So.2d 516 (Fla.) cert. denied, 473 U.S. 905, 105 S.Ct. 3527, 87 L.Ed.2d 652 (1985), and with the decisions of the Second District Court of Appeal in Beattie v. State, 595 So.2d 249 (Fla. 2d DCA 1992), and Bowser v. State, 555 So.2d 879 (Fla. 2d DCA 1989). The Jerelds opinion makes correct statements of law but misapplies them, generating confusion and disharmony.

In Cruz this court elaborated the two levels of analysis in which a court must engage when deciding an entrapment issue. These are first the threshold question of whether police conduct fell below certain standards, or the "objective" test, with its two-pronged requirement of interruption of specific ongoing criminal activity by a means reasonably tailored to apprehend those involved in it; and then the question of a person's proclivity to commit the particular crime, as set out in section 777.201, Florida Statutes (1989), which is the "subjective" test. 465 So.2d at 4521.

In Hunter the principle of objective entrapment was confirmed. 586 So.2d at 322. With its next entrapment case, Herrera v. State, 594 So.2d 275 (Fla. 1992), this court did not face the question of whether entrapment existed--under either objective or subjective test--but of whether the entrapment statute properly defines the subjective test as an affirmative defense.

Nothing in this chronological analysis indicates any changes in Florida's judicial position on entrapment. The district court, in its Jerelds opinion, purports to rely upon Hunter to affirm Jerelds's conviction for "specific ongoing criminal activity." The court implies that it "focuses solely on police conduct" to arrive at its decision, and does not address Jerelds's own disposition.

But stating a proposition of law and using it are two different things. The instant facts do not indicate any reason whatever to believe that Jerelds was engaged in ongoing criminal activity, or that any such activity was interrupted. The means used by the police cannot, by definition, be "reasonably tailored" to attack targeted activity, where no such activity is shown. What the court's opinion did was to equate improper police conduct with outrageous police conduct, find none, and affirm Jerelds's conviction.

It is true that this case does not offer a textbook illustration of entrapment. Examples of "good" entrapment cases are Beattie v. State, 595 So.2d 249 (Fla. 2d DCA 1992), and Bowser v. State, 555 So.2d 879 (Fla. 2d DCA 1989), both decided for the defendant on an objective test analysis. It is apparent that Jerelds's virtue may be easier to test than one would wish. Nevertheless, as far as Jerelds himself is concerned, the police manufactured the crime. Their proper target was the folks from whom the purchase was made, not Jerelds.

The district court stated the rule correctly but misapplied it in such a way as to subvert this court's decisions on entrapment.

CONCLUSION

BASED UPON the reasons expressed above, the petitioner respectfully requests that this honorable court exercise its discretionary jurisdiction and reverse the decision of the Fifth District Court of Appeal herein.

Respectfully submitted,

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL OF THE STATE OF FLORIDA
FIFTH DISTRICT JULY TERM 1992

NOT FINAL UNTIL THE TIME EXPIRES TO FILE REHEARING MOTION, AND, IF FILED, DISPOSED OF.

MARVIN JERALDS,

Appellant,

v.

CASE NO. 91-2370

STATE OF FLORIDA,

Appellee.

Opinion filed August 7, 1992

Appeal from the Circuit Court
for Orange County,
Jeffords D. Miller, Judge.

James B. Gibson, Public Defender, and Paolo G. Annino, Assistant Public Defender, Daytona Beach, for Appellant.

Robert A. Butterworth, Attorney
General, Tallahassee, and Anthony J.
Golden, Assistant Attorney General,
Daytona Beach, for Appellee.

PER CURIAM.

Marvin Jeralds was charged with and convicted of delivery and possession of cocaine. The issue raised by this appeal is entrapment. We affirm.

Three undercover agents approached Jeralds, who was standing on a street corner, and asked if he knew "Lisa," a known drug user. Jeralds himself was unknown to the agents at the time. When Jeralds acknowledged knowing Lisa, the agents asked him where they could find some cocaine. Jeralds got into the unmarked police car and directed them to an apartment complex. Once there, Jeralds left the car, approached several men, and returned to the agents' car with some crack cocaine. One of the agents handed $20 to Jeralds, who in turn handed the money to one of the drug dealers. The drug dealers immediately ran off, and only Jeralds was arrested and prosecuted.

Based on the foregoing facts and the case of State v. Hunter, 586 So. 2d 319 (Fla. 1991), Jeralds contends that the trial court erred by denying his motion for judgment of acquittal. In Hunter, the Florida Supreme Court reaffirmed the objective entrapment standard adopted in Cruz v. State, 465 So. 2d 516 (Fla.), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 905, 105 S.Ct. 3527, 87 L.Ed.2d 652 (1985). Hunter, 586 So. 2d at 321-22.

The Hunter rationale supports the defense of objective entrapment except where police activity interrupts "specific ongoing criminal activity." Id. at 322. As noted by the Hunter court, the objective entrapment standard focuses solely on police conduct, not on the subjective willingness or proclivity of the defendant to commit the crime. See id. In the instant case, the trial court found, and we agree, that a police officer asking a citizen where the police officer could find some cocaine is not the type of police activity which entitles a defendant to the defense of objective entrapment as explained in Cruz and Hunter.

AFFIRMED.

GOSHORN, C.J. and DIAMANTIS, J., concur.
COBB, J., concurs specially with opinion.

COBB, J., concurring specially.

If this case is governed by the rationale of State v. Hunter, 586 So.2d 319 (Fla. 1991), then it seems to me that Jeralds was entitled, as he contends, to a judgment of acquittal. In Hunter the Florida Supreme Court, subsequent to the enactment of section 777.201, Florida Statutes (1987), reaffirmed the objective entrapment standard it adopted in Cruz v. State, 465 So.2d 516 (Fla.), cert. denied, 473 U.S. 905, 105 S.Ct. 3527, 87 L.Ed.2d 652 (1985), thereby implicitly invalidating the statute pursuant to the due process clause of the Florida Constitution. See Hunter (Kogan, J., concurring in part, dissenting in part) at 325.

The Hunter rationale supports the defense of objective entrapment except where police activity interrupts "specific ongoing criminal activity." Its focus is solely on police conduct, not on the subjective willingness or proclivity of the defendant to commit the crime; the defendant's guilt cannot be inferentially established by the alacrity with which he participates in activity created or suggested by the police.

It may very well be, as Judge Schwartz recently observed, that the opinion in Hunter is at odds with the federal courts, the other forty-nine states, the Florida Legislature, executive law enforcement, and the doctrine of separation of powers. See Lewis v. State, 597 So.2d 842 (Fla. 3d DCA 1992) (Schwartz, C.J., concurring specially). It may also be that the implications of Hunter are incompatible with standard sting operations in Florida. See Lewis, n. 1 at 844. Nevertheless, as Judge Schwartz reluctantly concedes, appellate court judges are obligated to follow the ipse dixit of the Florida Supreme Court. If Hunter represents the current law of Florida in regard to the defense of entrapment, then the instant conviction should be reversed.

The true issue on this appeal is whether Hunter has been superseded sub silentio by Herrera v. State, 594 So.2d 275 (Fla. 1992). In Herrera, the majority opinion considered the constitutionality of section 777.201(2), Fla. Stat.,[1] which was enacted in 1987 -- but which was not mentioned in Hunter. Herrera was charged, inter alia, with trafficking in cocaine. The charges resulted from a sting operation initiated by a confidential informant. Herrera raised the affirmative defense of entrapment. At trial he sought a jury instruction that the burden to disprove entrapment was on the state. Instead, the trial court instructed the jury in accordance with section 777.201(2), that the defendant carried the affirmative burden to prove entrapment.

The Herrera opinion specifically upheld the 1987 legislation against the contention that it was violative of the due process clauses of the United States and Florida Constitutions. Said the court:

> As stated earlier, the lack of predisposition to commit the crime charged is an essential element of the defense of entrapment. The predisposition to commit a crime, however, is not the same as the intent to commit that crime. As explained by the New Jersey Supreme Court in its consideration of this issue, "predisposition is not the same as mens rea. The former involves the defendant's character and criminal inclinations; the latter involves the defendant's state of mind while carrying out the allegedly criminal act." State v. Rockholt, 476 A.2d 1236, 1242 (N.J. 1984). Requiring a defendant to show lack of predisposition does not relieve the State of its burden to prove that

[1] Section 777.201(2), Florida Statutes (1987) reads:

> (2) A person prosecuted for a crime shall be acquitted if he proves by a preponderance of the evidence that his criminal conduct occurred as a result of an entrapment. The issue of entrapment shall be tried by the trier of fact.

> the defendant committed the crime charged. The standard instructions require the State to prove beyond a reasonable doubt all the elements of the crime, and we find no violation of due process in requiring defendants to bear the burden of persuading their juries that they were entrapped.

Herrera at 278.

Justice Kogan's special concurrence lamented the majority's failure to discuss, or even mention, the objective entrapment analysis developed in Cruz, Glosson,[2] and Hunter. The concurrence attempted to limit the majority opinion to subjective entrapment only, but succeeded in picking up only one supporting vote for this view. Apparently, five members of the court were unwilling to draw the objective-subjective dichotomy urged by the concurring opinion, and Herrera's conviction, affirmed by the district court,[3] was approved. Logic compels the conclusion that if Hunter involved the issue of objective entrapment, so, then, did Herrera, since the latter case arose from a sting operation initiated by law enforcement. Based on Herrera, I concur in the affirmance of Jerald's conviction.
