STATEMENT OF CASE AND FACTS

The State relies on the statement of case and facts in its answer brief.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

Defendant's request for relief based on Hurst v. Florida, 136 S. Ct. 616 (2016), should be rejected.

ARGUMENT

DEFENDANT'S REQUEST FOR RELIEF BASED ON HURST SHOULD BE REJECTED.

Defendant contends that he is entitled to have his death sentence vacated and a life sentence imposed in light of the decision in Hurst v. Florida, 136 S. Ct. 616 (2016). However, Defendant is entitled to no relief because this issue is not even properly before this Court, and the arguments are meritless even if they were.

As this Court has recognized, it would not be proper to raise an issue in a post conviction appeal that was not presented in the post conviction motion. Doyle v. State, 526 So. 2d 909, 911 (Fla. 1988). Here, this matter is on appeal from the denial of a motion for post conviction relief that only raised a claim that Defendant was entitled to relitigate his claim that he is retarded in light of Hall v. Florida, 134 S. Ct. 1986 (2014). As such, all of the arguments being presented in this supplemental brief are not properly before this Court and should be rejected.

Even if the issue was properly presented, there would still be no basis for relief. Acknowledging that both this Court and the United States Supreme Court have already held that a determination that a defendant has a Sixth Amendment right to a jury determination of facts related to a sentence are not retroactive, Schriro v. Summerlin, 542 U.S. 348 (2004); Johnson v. State, 904 So. 2d 400 (Fla. 2005); Hughes v. State, 901 So. 2d 837 (Fla. 2005), Defendant nonetheless insists that Hurst is retroactive because it somehow involved a different issue that is more akin to Furman. However, in doing so, Defendant does little more than misconstrue the holding of Hurst and misrepresent the nature of the error at issue.

Latching onto language from Hurst regarding what findings are made in a sentencing order, Defendant argues that Hurst held that a jury must find that there is “sufficient aggravation” and that there is “insufficient mitigation” before a death sentence can be imposed without violating the Sixth Amendment. However, in relying on this language, Defendant ignores that construing that language as the holding of Hurst is inconsistent with the language in which the Court itself described the holding of Hurst and the legal precedent on which Hurst was decided and would result in the Court deciding an issue in contravention to the principles of federalism embodied in the Constitution.

In section II of the opinion in Hurst, the Court held that Florida’s capital sentencing statute was unconstitutional in light of Ring v. Arizona, 536 U.S. 584 (2002). Hurst, 136 S. Ct. at 621-22. In doing so, it recognized that Ring had arisen from its prior decision in Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000). Id. at 621. It acknowledged that its holding in Apprendi was based on a determination that “any fact that ‘expose[s] the defendant to a greater punishment than that authorized by the jury’s guilty verdict’ is an ‘element’ that must be submitted to a jury.” Hurst, 136 S. Ct. at 621 (quoting Apprendi, 530 U.S. at 494). It admitted that its determination in Ring that Apprendi rendered Arizona’s capital sentencing scheme unconstitutional was based on the realization that “the required finding of an aggravated circumstance exposed Ring to a greater punishment than that authorized by the jury’s guilty verdict.” Hurst, 136 S. Ct. at 621 (quoting Ring, 536 U.S. at 604). Moreover, at the conclusion of the opinion when it summarized its holding, the Court again limited its holding to the “existence of an aggravating circumstance.” Hurst, 136 S. Ct. at 624. Thus, through the portions of the opinion in which the Court reached and stated its holding, the Court focused on only the finding of an aggravating circumstance necessary to make a defendant eligible for a death sentence. In contrast, the language on which Defendant relies comes not from the section II of the opinion or the conclusion where the Court stated its holding but from section III of the opinion in which the Court was merely explaining why it was rejecting the arguments the State had presented. Id. at 622. Given the inconsistency between the language on which Defendant relies and the language in which the Court actually articulated its holding and the fact that the language is not from the portions of the opinion in which the holding was reached and enunciated, Defendant's suggestion that this language constitutes the holding of Hurst should be rejected.

Additionally, the language is actually inconsistent with the precedent on which the Court actually relied. In Apprendi, the Court examined whether the Sixth Amendment required a jury finding regarding a fact that made a defendant eligible for a sentence that exceeded the statutory maximum for the offense of which he was convicted. It held that “[o]ther than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt.” Id. at 490. At the time, it rejected the assertion that this holding would invalidate state capital sentence schemes based on the belief that once a jury had found a defendant guilty of a capital offense, the statutory maximum for the crime was death. Id. at 497 & n.21. Thus, the Court's focus was on facts that made a defendant eligible for a sentence and not all findings that influenced the selection of a sentence.

Two years later, the Court addressed the implications of Apprendi for Arizona's capital sentence scheme based on the Arizona Supreme Court's holding that the Court had misunderstood how Arizona's capital sentence scheme work and that a death sentence was not authorized until an aggravator was found at the penalty phase. Ring, 536 U.S. at 595-96. Because Arizona had no jury involved in the penalty phase at all, it determined that Arizona’s capital sentencing scheme was unconstitutional “to the extent that it allows a sentencing judge, sitting without a jury, to find an aggravating circumstance necessary for imposition of the death penalty.” Id. at 609. However, it did not alter the fact that the focus of this type of Sixth Amendment claim was findings need to increase the maximum sentence; not facts that merely influenced the sentence selected. In fact, it expressly noted that the claim being presented in that case was limited to the finding of an aggravator. Id. at 597 & n.4.

While the Court has altered the portion of the holding of Apprendi to cover findings that increased the sentencing range to which a defendant is exposed even if they did not change the statutory maximum, it has not changed the focus from findings that made a defendant eligible for a sentence. Alleyne v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2151, 2155, 2158 (2013); Southern Union Co. v. United States, 132 S. Ct. 2344 (2012); Cunningham v. California, 549 U.S. 270 (2007); Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296, 303-05 (2004). In fact, it recently reaffirmed that the Sixth Amendment right underlying Ring and Apprendi did not apply to factual findings made in selecting a sentence for a defendant after a finding had been made that authorized the defendant to receive a sentence within a particular range. Alleyne, 133 S. Ct. at 2161 n.2 (“Juries must find any facts that increase either the statutory maximum or minimum because the Sixth Amendment applies where a finding of fact both alters the legally prescribed range and does so in a way that aggravates the penalty. Importantly, this is distinct from factfinding used to guide judicial discretion in selecting a punishment ‘within limits fixed by law.’ Williams v. New York, 337 U.S. 241, 246, 69 S. Ct. 1079, 93 L. Ed. 1337 (1949). While such findings of fact may lead judges to select sentences that are more severe than the ones they would have selected without those facts, the Sixth Amendment does not govern that element of sentencing.”); see also United States v. O’Brien, 560 U.S. 218, 224 (2010). Given this continued focus on those findings that authorize a greater sentence, Defendant’s suggestion that Hurst somehow required jury findings about mitigation should be rejected.

Additionally, it should be remembered that a week after the Court issued its decision in Hurst, the Court issued a decision in Kansas v. Carr, 136 S. Ct. 633 (2016). There, the Court discussed the distinct determinations of eligibility and selection under capital sentencing scheme. In doing so, it stated that an eligibility determination was limited to findings related to aggravating circumstances and that determinations regarding whether mitigating circumstances existed and the weighing process were selection determinations.<sup>1</sup> In fact, it stated that such determinations were not factual findings at all. Id. Instead, it termed the determinations regarding the existence of mitigating circumstances as “judgment call[s]” and weighing determinations “question[s] of mercy.” Id. While it has been suggested that Carr’s statements about eligibility should be ignore because findings regarding mitigation are not required by Kansas law, this is untrue. Kansas’s death penalty statute expressly requires that a decision regarding whether a death sentence should be imposed be based on a determination that “one or more of the aggravating circumstances enumerated in K.S.A. 21-6624, and amendments thereto, exist and, further, that the existence of such aggravating circumstances is not outweighed by any mitigating circumstances which are found to exist.” Kan. Stat. Ann. § 21-6617.<sup>2</sup> Given Carr and the focus of Apprendi based claims on eligibility, Defendant’s suggestion that Hurst required jury findings on issues regarding mitigation and weighing should be rejected.

Additionally, Defendant’s claim regarding the holding of Hurst should be rejected because such a holding would conflict with the principle of federalism underlying our Constitution. The Court has recognized that federal courts, including it, are bound by state court interpretations of state law except when the interpretation was an “obvious subterfuge to evade consideration of a federal issue.” Mullaney v. Wilbur, 421 U.S. 684, 691 & n.11 (1975). It has recognized that how a capital sentencing statute functions to make a defendant eligible for the death penalty is an issue of state law. Zant v. Stephens, 462 U.S. 862, 870-73 (1983). Thus, the United States Supreme Court was bound, as a matter of constitutional federalism, by this Court's interpretation of what facts had to be found for a defendant to be eligible for the death penalty unless it could be shown that this Court's interpretation was an obvious attempt to avoid a finding of a Sixth Amendment violation.

However, no such showing can be made. Well before any of the Apprendi-based decisions existed, this Court had held not only is a death sentence authorized once a single aggravating circumstance is found but also that death is the presumptive proper sentence once any aggravator is found. State v. Dixon, 283 So. 2d 1, 9 (Fla. 1973). After Ring, this Court adhered to the interpretation that a death sentence was authorized if an aggravator was found. State v. Steele, 921 So. 2d 538, 545 (Fla. 2005). Since this Court's decision regarding eligibility was not an obvious attempt to avoid the Sixth Amendment issue, it was binding on the Court. Since Defendant's claim regarding the language in Hurst would have the United States Supreme Court overruling this Court on an issue of state law, it should be rejected. Instead, consistent with the language that Hurst itself uses in discussing its holding, the precedent on which Hurst is based and this Court's binding interpretation regarding what facts must be found for a death sentence to be authorized, the actual holding of Hurst is properly understood as finding a Sixth Amendment violation when a judge writes a sentencing order if the order is not based on a jury finding of an aggravator necessary to make a defendant eligible for a death sentence.

Further, while Defendant cites to Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279 (1986), Sullivan v. Louisiana, 508 U.S. 275 (1993), and Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1 (1999), to argue that the error in having a judge write a sentencing order is structural error, those cases does not support this assertion. Neither Fulminante or Sullivan concerned an error in allegedly not have a jury make a finding regarding whether an element of a crime had been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. While Neder did concern an error in failing to have a jury finding on an element, the Court actually held that such an error was a trial error and not a structural error. Neder, 527 U.S. at 6, 8-15.

Moreover, in Washington v. Recuenco, 548 U.S. 212, 215 (2006), the Court considered whether errors based on the Apprendi line of cases was a structural error. In rejected the assertion, it found that Neder controlled the issue and that such error were subject to harmless error review. Id. at 218-22. Consistent with this approach, this Court has held that the failure to obtain a jury finding on an Apprendi type error is subject to a harmless error analysis. Galindez v. State, 955 So. 2d 517, 521-23 (Fla. 2007). In fact, in Galindez, the Court expressly noted that it had applied a harmless error analysis to the failure to have a jury decide an element of an offense. Id. at 522. Thus, under binding precedent, the error found in Hurst was a mere trial error regarding the identity of the fact finder.

Given the actual holding of Hurst and the fact that it is a trial error, Defendant's attempt to equate Hurst with Furman is specious. In Furman, the Court invalidated capital punishment in all the states because it believed that the manner in which it was being administered was arbitrary and capricious. Thus, Furman was a broad ruling based on concerns of fairness and reliability. Hurst, in contrast, was merely a decision regarding a trial error concerning the identity of a fact finder, which does not raise the same concerns for fairness and reliability. Duncan v. Louisiana, 391 U.S. 145, 158 (1968); see also Summerlin, 542 U.S. at 353-54, 356-57. Thus, Defendant's attempt to equate Hurst with Furman should be rejected.

Instead, the more appropriate case with which Hurst equates is Duncan, which held that the Sixth Amendment right to jury applied to the states. As the Court held after applying the same test for retroactivity that this Court applied, that change in law was not of fundamental significance. DeStefano v. Woods, 392 U.S. 631 (1968). Thus, Defendant's request that this Court reconsider its prior determinations regarding the lack of retroactivity of Apprendi-based cases should be rejected, and Hurst should be held not to apply retroactively.

Defendant next suggests that this Court should reconsider its prior determinations that the type of error does not merit retroactive application because this Court allegedly relied on a determination that this type of error was inapplicable to Florida and allegedly applied the federal standard for retroactivity, which allegedly addresses different concerns. However, these assertions provide no basis to reconsider this Court's precedent.

First, while Defendant claims that Johnson and Hughes were based on a belief that Ring and Apprendi did not apply to Florida, this is not true. In Johnson, the Court expressly recognized that it had not decided how Ring might apply to Florida when it reached its decision. Johnson, 904 So. 2d at 406. Nothing in Hughes even remotely suggests that this Court believed that Apprendi did not apply to Florida or that it would not have affected the sentence given the defendant if it did. Thus, Defendant's suggestion that the decisions in Hughes and Johnson was based on a belief that the cases do not apply to Florida is false.

Defendant's suggestion that this Court applied the federal standard for retroactivity is also belied by the opinions. In both Johnson and Hughes, this Court expressly analyzed whether the decisions were of fundamental significance in accordance with the three prong test adopted in Witt v. State, 387 So. 2d 922 (Fla. 1980). Johnson, 904 So. 2d at 409-12, Hughes, 901 So. 2d at 840-46. In fact, in Johnson, this Court expressly stated that it was not relying on the federal retroactivity standard but merely looking at Summerlin for its discussion of the purpose of Ring because “a recent discussion of that purpose by the very Court that decided Ring is obviously worthy of our attention and deference.” Johnson, 904 So. 2d at 410 n.4.

Moreover, Defendant’s suggestion that the concerns that animate the federal retroactivity standard differ from the concerns that animate a Witt analysis is again false. As the United States Supreme Court has recently held, its decisions regarding retroactivity of its decisions are not based on the scope of relief available in a federal habeas proceeding.<sup>3</sup> Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S. Ct. 718, 728-30 (2016). Instead, as the Court itself explained in Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 303-10 (1989), its rules regarding retroactivity are designed to balance the societal interests in finality of judgments with the interests of the individual defendants. As this Court recognized in Witt, 387 So. 2d at 925-30, it adopted that anti-retroactivity rule to balance those same interests. As such, Defendant’s suggestion that the rules regarding retroactive have different purposes in state and federal court is again false.

Finally, Defendant appears to contend that this Court’s prior determination of the effect on the administration of justice of was flawed because it was based on the need to conduct review of old records and resentencings. Instead, he avers that §775.082(2), Fla. Stat. mandates that he receive an immediate life sentence. However, as the plain language of that provision provides, it is only applicable when the death penalty is declared unconstitutional. Here, as argued above, the Court did not find the death penalty unconstitutional; it merely found a trial error regarding the identity of the fact finder in the procedure through which a death sentence is imposed. Thus, Hurst did not hold the death penalty itself unconstitutional, and §775.082(2) does not apply. Since that section does not apply, Defendant's suggestion that this Court misconstrued the effect on the administration of justice should be rejected.

<sup>3</sup> Given that federal retroactivity does not concern the scope of federal habeas relief, Defendant’s reliance on Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362 (2000), and Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86 (2011), is misplaced, since both of those cases involved the scope of relief available under 28 U.S.C. §2254(d). Richter, 562 U.S. at 97-103; Williams, 529 U.S. at 402-13.

Defendant's citation to Anderson v. State, 267 So. 2d 8 (Fla. 1972), does not compel a different result. In Anderson, 267 So. 2d at 9, this Court read Furman as having declared the death penalty itself unconstitutional, which necessary rendered §775.082(2) applicable. This Court then granted those individuals with cases pending before this Court relief under Fla. R. Crim. P. 3.800 at the request of the State, finding the sentences illegal. Id. However, as this Court has held, 3.800 relief is only appropriate where a court could not have imposed a sentence and not merely when there was an error in sentencing that might have affected a sentencing decision. Brooks v. State, 969 So. 2d 238, 244 (Fla. 2007). Here, as argued above,

Hurst did not invalidate the death penalty itself; it merely found a trial error in the manner in which the death penalty was imposed. Moreover, this error did not make it such that a death penalty could not have been imposed. It merely required a change in the procedure to impose such a sentence.<sup>4</sup> Thus, Anderson also does not support Defendant's position.

Since Defendant has not proved a valid basis to revisit this Court's prior determination that Apprendi-based cases are not retroactive, those cases apply.<sup>5</sup> Brown v. Nagelhout, 84 So. 3d 304, 309 (Fla. 2012)(holding that to overcome the presumption in favor of stare decisis, a litigant must show not only that decision was erroneous but also the decision is unsound and unworkable). Since Defendant's convictions and sentences were final before either Ring or Hurst were decided, he is not entitled to any relief. The denial of his successive motion for post conviction relief should be affirmed.

This is all the more true as Defendant would not be entitled to relief even if

<sup>4</sup> Moreover, given the actual nature of the trial error found in Hurst, Defendant's reliance on Falcon v. State, 162 So. 3d 954 (Fla. 2015), which concerned the substantive change in law in Miller v. Alabama, 132 S. Ct. 2455 (2012), is misplaced.

<sup>5</sup> The same is true of this Court's prior rejection of the claim regarding jury determinations of retardation. Arbelaez v. State, 898 So. 2d 25, 43 (Fla. 2005); Rodriguez v. State, 919 So. 2d 1252, 1267 (Fla. 2005). This is all the more true as a finding of retardation would not increase the range of punishment to which a defendant would be subjected as is necessary for the Sixth Amendment right to attach. Alleyne, 133 S. Ct. at 2161 n.2.

Hurst applied. Given the actual holding of Hurst, any error here is clearly harmless. During the guilt phase, Defendant was found guilty of kidnapping. (DAR. 217-18) As a result, Defendant could not even legally challenge the application of the during the course of a felony aggravator at the penalty phase. Way v. State, 760 So. 2d 903, 917 (Fla. 2000). Since Defendant was eligible for a death sentence before sentencing began, any error in the fact that the judge wrote a sentencing order is harmless.<sup>6</sup>

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the denial of the successive motion for post conviction relief should be affirmed.
