REQUEST FOR ORAL ARGUMENT AND FULL BRIEFING

This appeal presents an important issue of first impression: whether federal law requires this Court to extend Hurst retroactivity to death sentences that became final before Ring,<sup>1</sup> rather than cabining Hurst relief to only post-Ring death sentences. Appellant respectfully requests oral argument on this and related issues pursuant to Fla. R. App. P. 9.320. Appellant also requests that the Court permit full briefing in this case in accord with the normal, untruncated rules of appellate practice.

Depriving Appellant the opportunity for full briefing in this case would constitute an arbitrary deprivation of the vested state right to a mandatory plenary appeal in capital cases. See Doty v. State, 170 So. 3d 731, 733 (Fla. 2015) (“[T]his Court has a mandatory obligation to review all death penalty cases to ensure that the death sentence is imposed in accordance with constitutional and statutory directives.”); See also Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422 (1982); Hicks v. Oklahoma, 447 U.S. 343 (1980).

RESPONSE TO ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE

COMES NOW, CURTIS WINDOM, by and through undersigned counsel, and files this Response to this Court's Order to Show Cause dated September 25, 2017. Mr. Windom, respectfully requests this Court reverse the circuit court's denial of his successive 3.851 Motion as being untimely, which motion was filed pursuant to Hurst I,<sup>2</sup> Hurst II<sup>3</sup> and Perry v. State, 210 So.3d 630 (Fla. 2016), and as grounds states:

STATEMENT OF RELEVANT PROCEDURAL HISTORY AND FACTS

On March 3, 1992, Curtis Windom was charged by way of Indictment with three counts of First Degree Murder and one count of Attempted Murder. The Indictment did not include aggravators the State intended to prove at sentencing in seeking the death penalty.

Mr. Windom was tried by jury and was found guilty as charged. The advisory panel recommended a death sentence by a vote of twelve to zero. Their recommendation contained no verdict or fact-finding. The judge imposed a death sentence on November 10, 1992. As the sole fact-finder, the Court found aggravating and mitigating factors and weighed them without the benefit of individual factual determination by a jury. In his Initial Brief on direct appeal,

Windom raised Ring-like Sixth Amendment claims in Case No. SC80-830, which this Court denied. SPCR379-396 The judgment and sentence was affirmed on appeal on April 27, 1995. Windom v. State, 656 So. 2d 432 (Fla. 1995).

On January 5, 2017, Mr. Windom filed Successive Motion to Vacate Death Sentence, seeking relief pursuant to Hurst I, Hurst II, and their progeny, which the trial court denied on March 7, 2017 as untimely, never reaching the merits of his motion. The court's Order is the subject of this appeal.

ARGUMENT – TIMELINESS AND RETROACTIVITY

To deny Mr. Windom retroactive relief under Hurst I and II, on the ground that his death sentence became final before June 24, 2002 under the decisions in Asay v. State, 210 So.3d 1 (Fla. 2016) and Hitchcock v. State, SC17-445, 2017 WL 3431500 (Fla. Aug. 10, 2017), while granting retroactive Hurst relief to inmates whose death sentences had not become final on June 24, 2002 under the decision in Mosley v. State, 209 So.3d 1248 (Fla. 2016), violates Mr. Windom's right to Equal Protection of the Laws under Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States (e.g., Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356 (1886); Skinner v. Oklahoma ex rel. Williamson, 316 U.S. 535 (1942)) and his right against arbitrary infliction of the punishment of death under the Eighth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States (e.g., Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420 (1980); Espinosa v. Florida, 505 U.S. 1079 (1992) (per curiam)).

In Hitchcock, this Court denied relief relying on Asay, a case that did not fully plead all applicable claims that have arisen since Hurst v. Florida. Asay's appeal was filed before Florida Chapter 2017-1, Hurst v. State and its progeny, laws and opinions that continued to develop in the wake of Hurst v. Florida. Nevertheless, this Court seems to have cut off any further argument as to any additional grounds for relief, though these grounds have never been addressed by this Court directly. As Justice Pariente found in her dissenting opinion, "Rather than analyze Hitchcock's constitutional arguments, the majority dismisses them without explaining why Asay, in fact, forecloses relief." Hitchcock, Op. at *3. Mr. Windom prays this Court will consider and address his arguments below.

I. Unanimity

In Hurst v. State, this Court found more than just a violation of the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution. This Court found that Hurst v. Florida, the ruling by the United States Supreme Court finding Florida's capital sentencing scheme unconstitutional, also involves a violation of the Eighth Amendment, as well as the Florida Constitution. This Court reasoned that death is different and the law must perform a narrowing function so death is not arbitrarily imposed, thereby violating the Eighth Amendment. A unanimous jury verdict, when made with other critical findings unanimously found by a jury, creates this degree of a high reliability. See, Hurst v. State, at 59. Mr. Windom's sentence was not the product of unanimous jury findings, nor did he receive the benefit of a penalty phase jury verdict. His case was only heard by an advisory panel and the verdict was rendered by a judge.

The precepts against cruel and unusual punishment under the Eighth Amendment also turn on evolving standards of decency. It is the near uniform judgement of our nation that the death penalty is only imposed by a unanimous jury verdict. Therefore, in light of this Court's reasoning in Hurst II, Mr. Windom's sentence lacks reliability and would be an arbitrary and unconstitutional imposition of death. Nevertheless, this Court will compound the arbitrariness of sentencing someone to death who was not sentenced by a jury, who unanimously made requisite findings of fact, by employing a cut-off date, so that only some inmates affected by Florida's unconstitutional death sentencing scheme will be entitled to relief. In Asay, this Court denied relief to a defendant, not based on issues of culpability or severity of the offense, but because his appeal was final before Ring. Asay, at 22. In so finding, this Court appears to have created a second Eighth Amendment violation.

II. Partial Retroactivity

Mr. Windom remains sentenced to death not because of where his case falls on the aggravation and mitigation continuum, but because of where his case falls on the calendar. The concept of partial retroactivity has no basis in Florida

Supreme Court or United States Supreme Court precedent and leads to a bizarre and unfair result that would violate both the Eighth, as well as the Fourteenth Amendment's guarantee of equal protection and due process. When two classes of similarly situation individuals are treated differently by a state actor, the question becomes "whether there is some ground of difference that rationally explains the different treatment . . ." Eisenstadt v. Baird, 405 U.S. 43. The Ring cutoff treats death-sentenced prisoners in the same posture—on collateral review— differently without "sound ground of difference that rationally explains the different treatment." McLaughlin v. Florida, 379 U.S. 184, 191 (1964).

Once this Court determined in Mosley that the Hurst decisions were retroactive to some cases on collateral review, it became prohibited under the United States and Florida Constitutions from arbitrarily limiting that retroactivity. "[R]etroactivity is a binary—either something is retroactive, has effect on the past, or it is not." See, Asay, at 37 (Perry, J., dissenting). This legal reality is highlighted by the United States Supreme Court's decision in Montgomery v. Louisiana,<sup>4</sup> the Delaware Supreme Court's recent decision in Powell v. Delaware<sup>5</sup> and the Florida Supreme Court's decision in Falcon. If the Court decides to endorse "partial retroactivity," it will be the outlier, see Powell, (holding Hurst v.

Florida retroactive to all prisoners), and constitutional challenges in the United States Supreme Court will likely follow. In Asay, Justice Pariente warned this Court that the result of using Ring as a cut-off date would be “an unintended arbitrariness.” Id., at 36. Justice Perry added in his dissent, at 37-38:

...the line drawn by the Ring opinion date cannot withstand scrutiny under the Eighth Amendment, because it creates an arbitrary application of law to two groups of similar situated persons.

Undoubtedly there will be situations where persons who commit equally violent felonies whose death sentences become final days apart will be treated differently without justification from this Court.

As a demonstration of how this prediction is coming true we need to look no further than Johnson v. State, 205 So.3d 1285 (Fla. 2016). In Johnson, the murder was committed in 1981, before the crime for which Mr. Windom is being sentenced was committed, but Mr. Johnson received relief because his direct appeal was final after Ring.<sup>6</sup>

It should also be noted that the date of a particular death sentence’s finality on direct appeal, in relation to the June 24, 2002 decision in Ring, has at times depended on whether there were delays in transmitting the record on appeal to this Court for <sup>6</sup> See also, Armstrong v. State, 211 So.3d 864 (Fla. 2017); Parker v. State, 873 So.2d 270 (Fla. 2004); Card. v. Julie L. Jones, 219 So.3d 47 (Fla. 2017); Israel v. State, 837 So.2d 381 (2002); Merck v. State, 975 So.2d 1054 (Fla. 2007). These cases demonstrate the illogical result that defendants who committed a murder before Windom committed his crime will be entitled to relief and their Hurst motions will not be untimely.

the direct appeal;<sup>7</sup> whether direct appeal counsel sought extensions of time to file a brief; whether a case overlapped with this Court’s summer recess; how long the assigned Justice of this Court took to submit the opinion for release;<sup>8</sup> whether an extension was sought for a rehearing motion and whether such a motion was filed; whether there was a scrivener’s error necessitating issuance of a corrected opinion; whether counsel chose to file a petition for a writ of certiorari in the United States Supreme Court or sought an extension to file such a petition; and how long a certiorari petition remained pending in the Supreme Court. The result of this cut-off date is that a death sentence may be dependent upon administrative delays, rather than the severity of the offense.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>7</sup> See, e.g., Lugo v. State, 845 So. 2d 74 (Fla. 2003) (two-year delay between the time defense counsel filed a notice of appeal and the record on appeal being transmitted to this Court, almost certainly resulting in the direct appeal being decided post-Ring).

<sup>8</sup> Compare Booker v. State, 773 So. 2d 1079 (Fla. 2017) (this Court’s opinion issued within one year after all briefs had been submitted, before Ring), with Hall v. State, 201 So. 3d 628 (Fla. 2016) (opinion issued twenty-three months after the last brief was submitted). If this Court had taken the same amount of time to decide Booker as it did Hall, Mr. Booker’s death sentence would have become final after Ring.

<sup>9</sup> In one striking example, this Court affirmed Gary Bowles’ and James Card’s unrelated death sentences in separate opinions that were issued on the same day, October 11, 2001. See Bowles v. State, 804 So. 2d 1173 (Fla. 2001); Card v. State, 803 So. 2d 613, 617 (Fla. 2001). Both inmates petitioned for a writ of certiorari in the U.S. Supreme Court. Mr. Card’s sentence became final four (4) days after Ring was decided—on June 28, 2002—when his certiorari petition was denied. Card v. Florida, 536 U.S. 963 (2002). However, Mr. Bowles’s sentence became final seven (7) days before Ring was decided—on June 17, 2002—when his certiorari petition was denied. Bowles v. Florida, 536 U.S. 930 (2002). This Court recently granted Hurst relief to Mr. Card, ruling that Hurst was retroactive because his sentence became final after the Ring cutoff. See, Card, 219 So. 3d at 47. However, Mr.

In contrast to Asay, this Court reasoned in Falcon, in the context of retroactivity analysis, “...considerations of fairness and uniformity make it very difficult to justify depriving a person of his liberty or his life under a process no longer considered acceptable and no longer applied to indistinguishable cases.”<sup>10</sup> Furthermore, in Witt this Court held, “the doctrine of finality should be abridged only when a more compelling objective appears, such as insuring fairness and uniformity in individual adjudications.” Witt at 925. Finally, in Johnson v. State,<sup>11</sup> at footnote 14 of Justice Anstead's prescient dissent, he cites a long lists of opinions where this Court has found that the new rule should be retroactive, rules that involved an outcome far less severe than death.

Clearly, Hurst v. State was not part of the Witt analysis in Asay as demonstrated by its reliance upon Johnson v. State, showing that no benefit to the administration of justice was to be gained from retroactively applying the Sixth Amendment right identified in Apprendi<sup>12</sup> and Ring and set forth in Hurst v. Florida.<sup>13</sup> Of course, the defendant in Asay did not present a claim under Hurst v.

Bowles, whose case was decided on direct appeal on the same day as Mr. Card's, falls on the other side of this Court's current retroactivity cutoff.

<sup>10</sup> Falcon v. State, 162 So.3d 954, 962 (Fla. 2015), quoting Witt v. State, 387 So.2d 922, 925 (Fla. 1980).

<sup>13</sup> In contrast to Asay, the Court in Mosley noted the benefit to be reaped from Hurst v. State in the course of its Witt analysis when it quoted from Hurst v. State:

State when filing his 3.851 motion under the exigencies of a death warrant on January 27, 2016, eight and a half months before the substantive constitutional right was recognized on October 14, 2016, in Hurst v. State.

Pre-Ring defendants do not differ from post-Ring defendants in that they both were sentenced under an unconstitutional scheme that allowed death sentences to be founded upon factual findings not tested by a jury trial. However, they do differ in ways that are more important than the Ring cut-off date used by this Court in analyzing which of these defendants should have Hurst I and II apply to them retroactively:

- a) In having been sentenced longer, they have demonstrated the ability to adjust to a prison setting without continuing to endanger any valid State interest;
- b) They have suffered long from the anxiety and uncertainty of having the death sentence hanging over their head for an unconscionable number of years;
- c) They are less likely than their post-Ring counterparts to have had the same quality of mitigation presented on their behalf, as the law and attorney training continues to improve for defendants facing a death sentence; and

Under Florida's independent constitutional right to a trial by jury, this Court concluded: "If death is to be imposed, unanimous jury sentencing recommendations, when made in conjunction with the other critical findings unanimously found by the jury, provide the highest degree of reliability in meeting these constitutional requirements in the capital sentencing process." Id. at 60.
Mosley, 209 So. 3d at 1278.

d) Over the past two decades there has been recognition of the wide ranging unreliability of many kinds of evidence, from flawed forensic-science theories and practices to hazardous eyewitness identification testimony.

These consideration have not been taken into account by this Court in performing their Witt analysis in Asay.

III. Witt v. State

The same conclusion as to the retroactivity of Hurst I and II can be arrived at by analyzing the third Witt factor, a change of fundamental significance, using the First Category of cases - where the constitutional change in the law “places beyond the authority of the State the power to ...impose certain penalties.” As in Walls<sup>14</sup> and Falcon<sup>15</sup>, Hurst I and II increase the number of potential cases in which the State cannot impose the death penalty. Before Hurst, a death recommendation was acknowledged where there was a mere majority of the jurors advising the judge to impose a death sentence. Additionally, a judge could sentence anyone to death, even if the jury recommended life. Hurst I overruled Spaziano<sup>16</sup> and it is no longer constitutional for a trial court to override a jury’s life recommendation. Hurst II held that only where a jury has unanimously found that sufficient aggravators exist to justify a death sentence and unanimously found that

the aggravators outweigh the mitigating factors that were present in the case, and have unanimously recommended death can a defendant be sentenced to death – a significantly smaller class of defendants. Therefore, it is reasonable to apply a Witt analysis to a pre-Ring case, using Category 1 of the Third Prong, and find that Hurst is fully retroactive. Windom’s Motion should be considered on its merits and he should have an opportunity to establish that the Hurst error was not harmless, rather than have his claims summarily denied as untimely.

IV. *James v. State

In Asay, the case relied upon by this Court for the proposition that Hurst should not apply retroactively to pre-Ring cases is a case where the defendant did not plead the fact that the defendant raised Sixth Amendment claims in the form of pre-trial motions or on direct appeal. In Asay, at footnote 12, the Florida Supreme Court noted, “[Asay] did not raise a Sixth Amendment challenge to his death sentence at any time prior to Ring.”

On direct appeal, Windom challenged the constitutionality of Florida’s death sentencing scheme raising Sixth Amendment issues that mirrored Ring claims. SPCR379-396 Mr. Windom is not asking this Court to ignore its recent opinions that deny Hurst relief to pre-Ring cases, but to take into account this Court’s own language and distinction mentioned in its majority opinions.

In Mosley, at 1275, this Court found:

While this Court did not employ a standard retroactivity analysis in James<sup>17</sup>, the basis for granting relief was that of fundamental fairness. Id. This Court reasoned that, because James had raised the exact claim that was validated by the United States Supreme Court in Espinosa, “it would not be fair to deprive him of the Espinosa ruling.” Id.

In the Mosley opinion, at 1276, footnote 13, this Court drops any distinction between Ring claims and refers to the type of claim which Ring represents, a Sixth Amendment claim.

The fairness standard under James is not an opinion of a lower court, another state court or a federal court that has no bearing on Florida law. James is a case cited by the majority of this Court in a landmark decision concerning the issue of retroactivity. See, Mosley, at 1274-1275. Like Mosley,<sup>18</sup> Windom raised the same claims that were held to be valid in Ring and in Hurst, but he was incorrectly denied relief. This Court relegated his claim to a footnote (FN 4) and did not even dignify the claim with an opinion. See, Windom 656 So.2d at 436. Failure to extend James to Mr. Windom’s case is arbitrary, capricious and denies Mr. Windom equal protection under the law, contrary to the Eighth and Fourteenth

<sup>18</sup> Mosley noted that the Court in Asay had not foreclosed the retroactive application of Hurst v. Florida to other capital postconviction defendants. See, Mosley, at 1274 and Asay, at 22. Thus, Mosley is a follow-up opinion to Asay that makes clear that Asay is limited in its scope and merely concludes that Asay is not entitled to the benefit of Hurst v. Florida. Asay does not mean that Hurst v. Florida is not to be applied retroactively in any capital collateral case; in fact, Mosley holds that Hurst v. Florida is to be applied retroactively to at least 2002, and when fundamental fairness dictates and/or when the Witt balancing test warrants.

Amendments of the United States Constitution.

Although Mr. Windom's sentence became final prior to the issuance of Ring, this Court has "the power to reconsider and correct erroneous rulings in exceptional circumstances and where reliance on the previous decision would result in manifest injustice, notwithstanding that such rulings have become the law of the case." State v. Owen, 696 So. 2d 715, 720 (Fla. 1997).

V. Federal Retroactivity for Substantive Rules

Furthermore, where a constitutional rule is substantive, the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution requires a state post-conviction court to apply it retroactively. In Montgomery, the Supreme Court held, "Where state collateral review proceedings permit prisoners to challenge the lawfulness of their confinement, States cannot refuse to give retroactive effect to a substantive constitutional right that determines the outcome of that challenge." Montgomery, at 731. In Hurst II, this Court announced not one, but two substantive constitutional rules. First, this Court held that the Sixth Amendment requires that a jury decide whether those aggravating factors that have been proven beyond a reasonable doubt are sufficient in themselves to warrant the death penalty and, if so, whether those factors outweigh the mitigating circumstances. Such findings are manifestly substantive. Second, this Court determined that the Eighth Amendment requires a unanimous determination that all the evidence presented to a jury at the penalty phase warrants a death sentence. Likewise, the unanimity rule is substantive. Therefore, the Hurst rulings should apply to this case.

Mr. Windom raised in his successive motion that he was entitled to relief because he was denied the right Due Process, to the State proving each element beyond a reasonable doubt, violating the Fourteenth Amendment. While this is a freestanding basis for relief, it is also definitive proof that the changes in the law in Hurst I and II were substantive. Therefore, a claim that Federal law would require that Hurst be applied retroactively is not undermined by Schriro v. Summerlin, 542 U.S. 348, 364 (2004), wherein the United States Supreme Court held that Ring was not retroactive in the federal habeas context under the federal retroactivity test articulated in Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288 (1989).

Summerlin did not review a statute like Florida's that required the jury not only to conduct the fact-finding regarding the aggravators, but also the fact-finding as to whether the aggravators were sufficient to impose death. Moreover, as noted above, Hurst, unlike Ring, addressed the proof-beyond-a-reasonable-doubt standard in addition to the jury trial right, and the Supreme Court has always regarded such decisions as substantive. See Ivan V., 407 U.S. at 205; see also Powell v. Delaware, 153 A.3d 69 (Del. 2016) (holding Hurst retroactive under Delaware's state Teague-like retroactivity doctrine and distinguishing Summerlin on the ground that Summerlin "only addressed the misallocation of fact-finding responsibility (judge versus jury) and not . . . the applicable burden of proof."). And with Hurst, unlike in Summerlin, there is an Eighth Amendment unanimity rule at issue in addition to the Sixth Amendment's jury-trial guarantee. See Summerlin, 542 U.S. at 353.

VI. Caldwell v. Mississippi

Under Caldwell v. Mississippi, 472 U.S. 320 (1985), Mr. Windom’s jury must have been correctly instructed as to its sentencing responsibility. Hurst I reiterated principles that the Supreme Court has found since Ring, that specific findings authorizing the imposition of the sentence of death must be made by the jury. This means it is the jury’s responsibility to render a death sentence.<sup>19</sup>

Therefore, individual jurors must know they each bear the responsibility for a death sentencing resulting in a defendant’s execution since each juror possesses the power to require the imposition of a life sentence simply by voting against a death recommendation. Otherwise, “a real danger exists that a resulting death sentence will be based at least in part on the determination of a decision maker that has been misled as to the nature of its responsibility.” Mann v. Dugger, 844 F.2d 1446, 1454-55 (11th Cir. 1988). Additionally, since the role Windom’s jury played was merely advisory, we cannot now convert that recommendation to a verdict, which carries a different weight, gravity and responsibility, in determining whether the Hurst error was harmless.

Because the jury’s sense of responsibility was inaccurately diminished in Caldwell, the Supreme Court held that the jury’s unanimous verdict imposing a death sentence in that case violated the Eighth Amendment and required the resulting death sentence to be vacated. Caldwell, 472 U.S. at 341 (“Because we cannot say that this effort had no effect on the sentencing decision, that decision does not meet the standard of reliability that the Eighth Amendment requires.”). Likewise, Mr. Windom’s sentence is a violation of the Eighth Amendment of the United States Constitution and the timeliness of this claim is not subject to a Ring cut-off date.

VII. Retroactive application of Chapter 2017-1

A significant development since Mr. Windom filed his successive motion to vacate is the March 13, 2017 enactment of Chapter 2017-1 which amends Florida’s capital sentencing statute to preclude the imposition of a death sentence unless a jury returns a unanimous death recommendation. The legislature has codified the fundamental constitutional right that this Court identified in Hurst v. State.

Chapter 2017-1 applies retrospectively to all homicide cases regardless of the date of the offense. It will apply to any first degree murder case that goes to trial. It will apply to any first degree murder case in which a retrial or resentencing is conducted. Thus, the statute will govern at Paul Johnson’s resentencing which was recently ordered even though the homicides for which he is to be sentenced occurred in 1981. Johnson v. State, 205 So. 3d 1285 (Fla. 2016). His conviction of those homicides was final in 1992, yet at his resentencing which will occur at some point in the future, Mr. Johnson cannot receive a death sentence if one or more jurors votes for a life sentence. Mr. Johnson's homicides occurred many years before the ones Mr. Windom stands convicted of, and Mr. Johnson's convictions were final a decade before Mr. Windom's convictions became final. Yet, Mr. Johnson now has a substantive right under the statute to an acquittal of the death penalty if one juror votes for a life sentence.

This statutory right arises from a statute that creates a substantive rule, and as such must be applied retroactively. In Montgomery v. Louisiana, 136 S. Ct. 718, 732 (2016), the United States Supreme Court held:

As a final point, it must be noted that the retroactive application of substantive rules does not implicate a State's weighty interests in ensuring the finality of convictions and sentences. Teague warned against the intrusiveness of "continually forc[ing] the States to marshal resources in order to keep in prison defendants whose trials and appeals conformed to then-existing constitutional standards." 489 U.S., at 310, 109 S.Ct. 1060. This concern has no application in the realm of substantive rules, for no resources marshaled by a State could preserve a conviction or sentence that the Constitution deprives the State of power to impose. See Mackey, 401 U.S., at 693, 91 S.Ct. 1160 (opinion of Harlan, J.) ("There is little societal interest in permitting the criminal process to rest at a point where it ought properly never to repose").

In Welch v. United States, 136 S. Ct. 1257, 1264 (2016), the Supreme Court held:

First, "[n]ew substantive rules generally apply retroactively." Schriro v. Summerlin, 542 U.S. 348, 351, 124 S.Ct. 2519, 159 L.Ed.2d 442 (2004); see Montgomery v. Louisiana, 577 U.S. —, —, 136 S.Ct. 718, 728, 193 L.Ed.2d 599 (2016); Teague, supra, at 307, 311, 109 S.Ct. 1060. Second, new "watershed rules of criminal procedure," which are procedural rules "implicating the fundamental fairness and accuracy of the criminal proceeding," will also have retroactive effect.

In Schriro v. Summerlin, 542 U.S. 348, 355-56 (2004), the U.S. Supreme Court explained what is necessary for a new rule to qualify as watershed:

Rather, the question is whether judicial factfinding so “seriously diminishe[s]” accuracy that there is an “ ‘impermissibly large risk’ ” of punishing conduct the law does not reach.

In his dissenting opinion in Schriro, Justice Breyer explained:

As I have pointed out, the majority does not deny that Ring's rule makes some contribution to greater accuracy. It simply is unable to say “confidently” that the absence of Ring's rule creates an “ ‘impermissibly large risk’ ” that the death penalty was improperly imposed.
542 U.S. at 366.

The retrospective Chapter 2017-1 established a substantive rule that must be applied retroactively. Failure to extend the benefits of the statute to Mr. Gamble violates the Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

VIII. Florida Constitution

The trial court’s denial of Appellant’s motion failed to consider this Court’s opinion in Perry v. State,<sup>20</sup> where this Court found Florida's post-Hurst revision of the death penalty statute was still unconstitutional after reviewing the statute in light of the its opinion in Hurst II and the Florida Constitution. This Court held<sup>21</sup>, that as a result of the longstanding adherence to unanimity in criminal jury trials in Florida, the right to a jury trial set forth in article I, section 22 of the Florida Constitution requires that in cases in which the penalty phase jury is not waived, the findings necessary to increase the penalty from a mandatory life sentence to death must be found beyond a reasonable doubt by a unanimous jury. [fn4] Hurst, 202 So.3d at 44-45. Those findings specifically include unanimity as to all aggravating factors to be considered, unanimity that sufficient aggravating factors exist for the imposition of the death penalty, unanimity that the aggravating factors outweigh the mitigating circumstances, and unanimity in the final jury recommendation for death. Id., at 53-54, 59-60. (Emphasis added.)

Importantly, Footnote 4 of Perry states, “In Hurst, we also decided the requirements of unanimity under both the Sixth and Eighth Amendments to the United States Constitution, but our basic reasoning rests on Florida’s independent constitutional right to trial by jury. Art. I, § 22, Fla. Const.” Id., at 633. Therefore, it has always been a requirement under Florida jurisprudence that juries must return unanimous verdicts. Therefore, retroactivity is not an issue for Windom, whose case does not pre-date the Florida Constitution.

Further support for this argument can be found in the reasoning of the Supreme Court in Stringer v. Black, 503 U.S. 222, 228 (1992), where retroactivity would not be an issue under a federal Teague<sup>22</sup> analysis if the new case is merely an interpretation of existing law. As in Stringer v. Black, the right to a trial by jury and a unanimous verdict is not a new rule announced by Hurst v. State. In requiring a unanimous verdict for a death sentence, this Court did not break new ground, as there has been a “longstanding adherence to unanimity in criminal jury trials in Florida.” Hurst v. State was, therefore, for purposes of Teague, a right controlled by the Florida Constitution. The precedent already existed at the time of Windom’s sentencing. See, Stringer, at 229. In Stringer, the Supreme Court held;

The purpose of the new rule doctrine is to validate reasonable interpretations of existing precedents. Reasonableness, in this as in many other contexts, is an objective standard, and the ultimate decision whether [a new case] was dictated by precedent is based on an objective reading of the relevant cases.

Finally, denying Mr. Windom the same right to a unanimous jury verdict, rather than an advisory panel’s mere recommendation, as every other citizen of the State of Florida violates his right to Equal Protection and therefore, not only violates the Florida Constitution, but also the Fourteen Amendment of the United States Constitution.

CONCLUSION

It would be a miscarriage of justice to deny Mr. Windom retrospective application of Hurst v. Florida, Hurst v. State, Perry v. State, and Chapter 2017-1. A denial of the right to have a hearing on whether Mr. Windom’s death sentence should be vacated rises to a level of capriciousness and inequality that violates the Eight Amendment and Equal Protection respectively.

WHEREFORE, Windom prays this Court find his claims are timely filed and remand this case to the circuit court for a ruling on the merits of his Motion.
